WORK IN EARNEST.

Mayor Grant Is Back and Ready to Grapple With 1892's Needs.

Mayor Grant Is back at his desk, brown of skin and with calloused hands, to which he points smilily when asked if he had a good time during his ten days' outing.

Most of his time has been spent on Saranac Lake in the Adirondacks, and he returned this morning by the way of Lakes Champlain and George, accompanied by City Judge Leicester Holmes, who joined him in his forest retreat last week.

The Mayor was overwhelmed with inquiries as to what he proposed doing in the matter of the proposed 1892 Exposition, when the next meeting will be called, when he will announce his Committee of One Hundred, and if he has made selection of any committeemen.

Speaker Speer got the ear of Mayor Grant and an arrangement was made concerning the selection of committees.

Mr. Owen has an elaborate scheme for the redemption of these tickets and to provide for taxes.

Charles A. Moore has another inderor as the machinery representative at the Fair in John B. Gray, of the American Brake Company.

The New York Furniture Board of Trade names Theodore Hofstatter as its representative.

President F. B. Crocker, of the New York Electrical Society, inderors and seconds the nomination of F. W. Herzen as the representative of the electrical industry in the Exposition, and point to the fact that the electrical exhibit will constitute probably 10 per cent. of the whole exhibit, and is likely to furnish half the interest on which the success of the fair will depend.

Richard B. Ewart is proposed as fit to represent the insurance and two gentlemen are forthcoming in applying for employment as clerks of committees.

ROASTED ON A LIVE WIRE.

Western Union Lineman Clark Has a Terrible Experience.

Frank Clark, a Western Union lineman, picked up the live end of an electric wire lying on the roof of the shed in front of 216 Washington street this morning, and immediately began a song and dance on the tin roof that could have been heard a block away.

His antics in trying to let go of the wire drew a great crowd, but no one seemed to know what to do until one of Clark's comrades, who was on pole some distance away, cut off the wire through which the deadly electric current was speeding its way to the unfortunate lineman's body.

He had turned black and brown, and looked like he'd been well done. The smell of the burning flesh was sickening.

His crowd gathered that Washington street, in that vicinity, was impassable for a quarter of an hour.

Clark was gently carried down to the street in an ambulance to Chambers Street Hospital.

Surgeon Davis attended him there and has hope of his recovery. Clark could not say how he had got so careworn as to pick up the live wire.

Policeman Stevens, of the Church street station, could not find out to which company the wire belonged.

Clark is a single man, thirty-five years old, and lives at 68 West street.

Mr. Morris Jacobi writes favoring the selection of the New York Fair, and urges that it will greatly increase the taxable value of the property in the annexed district to the relief of the lower portion of the city.

Charles Schlesinger, one of the Commissioners appointed by Congress to arrange for a World's Fair in 1889, sends a letter which is used in that the writer expressly states that he seeks no appointment for himself or others.

He ascribes the failure of the 1889 fair to materialize to the apathy of the transit companies, which are most to benefit by the fair, and says that the great railroad and steamship companies ought to subscribe at least eight millions for the Exposition, with a proviso that it shall be returned to them in proportion to the profits realized from the Fair.

Sculptor Alexander Doyle briefly outlines the scheme by which the money was raised for the proposed 1892 Exposition.

Bonds were issued for the necessary amount redeemable in seventy years, to provide for which a sufficient proportion of the fund is set aside to absolutely secure with its earnings the principal.

The bonds bear no interest, but each subscriber receives the full value of his subscription in admission tickets, which, being negotiable, are alone an equivalent for the subscription.

Should the exposition be successful the bonds are redeemed at once with earnings; but in any event the principal is thus assured.
